According to the facts presented in this story the life of a Light House keeper is not so awfully slow. In fact the old man and his half witted son start off the day by dancing the sailors horn pipe to the music of a flute played by Harry Cat. Shortly before noon the old man sighted a floating raft just inside the eleven and one half mile limit, and there was something on board. He rushes right into the whale garage and cranks up the fastest sea whale. When he arrives the black bottle turns out to be a homeless black cat so he goes home disgusted. At twelve o'clock "Stupid" calls in all of the fish for a swell feed on the bank. As soon as he leaves them a Pelican decides to make a meal out of the fish.

At three thirty, six of the old mans kittens were having a great time sliding down the long spiral staircase of the light house. The old man had just finished his bath for the month and was walking into the light house when he is badly bumped by the whole flock of cats coming down. He chases them all up again and one cat drags him down for a ride. The rest of the cats place some grease on the walk so he will slide well when he lands. They all give him a push and he lands in the ocean. This proves that: "Only Goats Lose Their Goat".
